Doyle Purdy is a chief warrant officer in the U.S. Navy, assigned to Naval Computer and Telecommunications Area Master Station, Pacific (NCTAMSPAC). Tim Fields is a chief machinery technician with the U.S. Coast Guard. Joel Bautista is a senior chief electrician's mate, assigned to Afloat Training Group Middle Pacific. John Holy is a retired chief information systems technician for the Navy. Mike Yanga is a Navy family member. They all have their individual place in the military ohana, but together this eclectic group makes up the together this eclectic group makes up the quintet that is known as Zoundbox, an experimental alternative band that is hitting the military and local clubs with a variety of music.

"We all just clicked right from the get go, and that is something that is probably brought out in our music," said drummer

Holy. "We can play to a crowd and pretty much hit everybody's style of music."

The band began one-by-one and eventually gained all their members in July. They play gigs on various military installations and Oahu clubs with a mix of original and cover songs for their fans. cover songs for their fans.

"We're an original band with a side order or covers," said lead singer and rhythm gui-tarist Purdy. "We add an acoustic flavor and have a variety of music."

Zoundbox has over 20 original songs ranging from mellow, local, experimental and alternative. The band is comprised of a rhythm, acoustic and lead guitar, keyboards, drums and bass.

"I'll have a melody in my head and bring it in," said Purdy. "Joel figures it out fast. John figures out the drumbeat. Mike figures out the bass. Tim figures out the lead guitar and the keyboards. It just happens, and we can come out of here in one session knowing the song already. That's how things click in this band."

The members agree being in a band while in the military is hard, not only because of the demands of their jobs, but their families as well.

"The hardest thing about being in a band, because everyone is either active-duty military or a student, is the schedules," said Holy.

"Not only are we in the military, but we have family responsibilities," said lead guitar and keyboard player Fields. "This stuff takes away from the family. Yes it's hard, but if you want to do something and you want to do it good, then you make the time. It's a passion. It's just a great feeling to take this music from ground level and get four other people to play it with you."

But they all said the support from their wives, children and girlfriends are the reason they are still together and playing so

"If it wasn't for the spouses and children supporting us, we wouldn't be where we are today," said Holy

So why do they do it? "Music is about the passion," said bassist Yanga. "It somehow riggers something inside of me. I totally feel like I am one with the music."

"Music for me is a form of relaxation," said acoustic guitarist Bautista. "I can stay in a room and play all day. I won't be bored as long as I have my guitar with me."

'Pillow Talk' for returning Sailors

Karen S. Spangler Assistant Editor

When Sailors from the USS Paul Hamilton returned to Pearl Harbor from a four-and-a-halfmonth deployment on Sept. 9, they were greeted with a special kind of "pillow talk."

Pillow cases, colorfully decorated and in a variety of designs, fluttered in the breeze from the fence pierside as the ship arrived.

Some of Paul Hamilton's Sailors didn't have families and friends waiting on the dock to give them a warm welcome home. But pillow-cases adorned with personalized photos and heartfelt messages from families here in Hawai'i and hundreds of miles away expressed thanks, appreciation and love to the Sailors who were returning.

Spearheaded and coordinated by Nicole Romero, the treasurer for the USS Paul Hamilton Family Support Group and wife of Quartermaster 1st Class (SW) Rafael Romero, Project Pillow Case was launched to show support and appreciation for the returning Sailors. "This was especially nice for the Sailor that might not have family here, but a family member from back home was able to make a pillow case and a note of encouragement on a job well done," explained Romero.

Romero derived the idea from a similar pillow case project during her husband's first deployment, when he was assigned to the USS Saipan (LHA2) at Norfolk, Va. The wives' support group decorated pillow cases and sent them to the Sailors on the ship while they were still at sea. The Paul Hamilton wives and family members began working on Project Pillow Case about three weeks after the ship deployed, Romero said.

Project Pillow Case proved to be popular for many families who weren't able to make the trip to Hawai'i to welcome their loved ones home. "For over two years, I've been at all my husband's homecomings. This will be his first time looking out at all the loved ones and not seeing his own. It breaks my heart to not be there for him. At least with this pillow case, he'll be able to see our faces," wrote one Navy wife named Carol as she thanked the spouse's ohana for the opportunity to contribute to Project Pillow Case.

"What an awesome project! Thank you so much for telling me about this...especially since we can't be there to greet our Sailor," wrote Amanda, wife of another Paul Hamilton Sailor.

LaFonda, a spouse in Arkansas, wrote, "We will not be there when the ship pulls in. But, I wanted to tell ya'll how much I appreciate this opportunity and how much I appreciate ya'll doing this for the men & women, like my husband, whose family may not get to be there to welcome them back in person. I think it is a very thoughtful idea."

A mother from Texas expressed her appreciation for the project. "Thanks to all of you that are working on this project for the Sailors. I know it will mean a lot to each one," she said. Dawn, the mother of another Paul Hamilton Sailor, expressed her support of the project and her appreciation to the family support group. "I have so much peace knowing he is happy with his ship, his shipmates and base in Honolulu. May God bless each of you and keep our sons, husbands and families safe from harm," she said.

The pillow cases were creative and offered glimpses into events and holidays that the Sailors had missed during the deployment and many were personalized with photos of loved ones. Cards that represented holidays the Sailors had missed, letters and other loving tokens were placed inside the pillow cases by family members.

One of the pillow cases sent a special reminder to one Paul Hamilton Sailor, Gunners Mate 3rd Class Chad Johnson from his fiancée, Amanda Lewis, back home in Plainview, Texas. A copy of the couple's wedding invitation decorated the pillow case with an accompanying a note that read, "I can't wait to marry you. See you at the altar!"

Quartermaster 1st Class Lawan Jackson talked about how he felt when the ship pulled into Pearl Harbor and he was greeted by his family and presented with a special pillow case.

"It was overwhelming. It was just a joyous feeling. It's the first time I received something like that since I've been on deployments," Jackson said. "When we were pulling in, my co-workers saw them [pillow cases on the pier] and they said that it was cool and said, 'Look at my name on the pier," he continued. "It was really a good idea. That's going to be something that helps me remember that deployment."

"It's always an emotional time when you come home from deployment. We noticed all of the pillow cases on the fence on the pier - which was really cool," explained QMC (SW) Jim Gathman. "It was a symbol of, 'Hey, we're here. We're waiting for you. Welcome home!" he said.

The Sailors from the Paul Hamilton took their pillow cases home with them as a memorable keepsake as they disembarked the ship. "For them to come home and see something individual for them, instead of just a "welcome home" banner was exciting," noted Romero. "They had a piece of homecoming that they could take home with them."

"They'll always look at their pillow cases and know that it was from CARAT Cruise 2005. It will remind them of their time on Paul Hamilton," Romero said.

September is Ombudsman Appreciation Month

PH2 Christopher Gerrior

Contributing Writer

It is the middle of the Vietnam War, Nixon is president and Admiral Elmo Zumwalt is the Chief of Naval Operations. With the issuance of Z-Gram 24, Admiral Zumwalt formed the Navy Family Ombudsman Program on Sept. 14 1970. Since the inception of that brand new instruction, OPNAVINST 1750.1E, signed June 27, the ombudsman program has withstood the test of time.

September is Ombudsman Appreciation Month. Ombudsmen are volunteers appointed by commanding officers (CO) to serve two important roles: a communications link between the CO and command family members and a professionally trained information and referral specialist for the command's families.

Training is a major aspect of the ombudsman program. All new ombudsmen are required to complete 24 hours of standardized basic training. Additionally, all ombudsmen must attend 10 hours of advanced training a year and ongoing training at monthly assembly meetings

All this training is not to pad a resume; it's to serve family members just like you. Ombudsmen make themselves available to assist family members in handling a variety of situations ranging from automotive repair to emergency messages to suicide and everything in between.

Each of the three Navy communities in Hawai'i (surface, submarine, and air) has ombudsman assemblies. Sherrie Ingram serves as Navy Region ombudsman and assembly chairperson for Commander, Navy Region Hawai'i.

Diane Thompson is the force ombudsman and interim assembly chairperson for Commander, Submarine Force Pacific. Jennifer Gerrior is the Kaneohe Bay assembly chairperson. These ladies are committed to helping Navy families and have the following message, "Do you know who your ombudsman is? If you haven't heard from your ombudsman, it's possible that she does not have your current contact information. Your spouse's command or the ombudsman program coordinator can help put you in contact with your current ombudsman."

In a recent survey of 25 Sailors and Navy family members at the Pearl Harbor NEX/ Commissary, 96 percent of those surveyed knew what an ombudsman was and about 72 percent knew who their ombudsman

Of those, 88 percent knew how to contact their ombudsman. One Navy wife even had her ombudsman's phone number programmed into her cell phone.

Teresa Espiritu, ombudsman program coordinator, can be reached at the Pearl Harbor Fleet and Family Support Center by calling 473-4222, ext. 275. Some of Espiritu's duties are to coordinate ombudsman trainings, serve as a resource for ombudsmen, support ombudsmen and provide program guidance to commands.

She also works closely with a highly-experienced team of ombudsman trainers, Rayna Beck, Maraline Freeman, Sherrie Ingram, Janeane Robinson, Diane Thompson and Karen Vizina.

Emergencies happen when you least expect them. Ombudsmen are highly trained to assist you in handling them. Your ombudsman is willing and able to help 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Get to know your ombudsman, have her contact information handy at all times, understand what she can do for you and give her a chance.

That may also be a good time to give your ombudsman a call and thank him or her for the time and effort they give and to let your chain of command know that their ombudsman is appreciated.

JO3 Ryan C. McGinley Charlie and the Chocolate Factory

"Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory" was a slow growing classic, which ended up sacrificing oddity for youthfulness. Director Tim Burton's decidedly unique perspective on the remake sticks more to the Roald Dahl novel and less with the concern for acceptance and likeability.

The new film is almost an exact replica of the first with respect to story line. The one notable difference is a substantial back story concerning Willy Wonka and his childhood. We learn about Wonka's father (ironically a dentist) and more importantly how Wonka became the world's most unusual candy cre-

Johnny Depp is brilliant as Willy Wonka without overextending to the point of stealing the show. His lines are limited, and Burton gets the most out of his famous actor through non-verbal communication. Depp's peculiar, tacit behavior pays homage to the likes of Buster Keaton and Charlie Chaplin with sublime idiosyncratic humor.

What makes this film really stand out though is Tim Burton. If ever there was a director whose mind was bizarre enough to reimagine the original "Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory," it's him. From "Edward Sissorhands" to "Sleepy Hollow" to "Ed Wood," Burton has continually transformed stories into magical adventures full of incongruities, and almost always crosses the line into questionable madness. The film is a visual delight, which narrowly escapes dementia and almost always entertains. Willy Wonka is not so much a likeable hero (as in the first film), but rather a borderline psychotic. The personalities of the children who win golden tickets are heightened to the point of downright annoyance, as well they should be. Every frame of Burton's warped little film is a lesson in extremities and just how far he can take it.

"Charlie and the Chocolate Factory," though quantitative in it's acting and remarkably brazen score, belongs to Burton. If ever there was a movie to escape the world-weariness, and if ever there was a director whose mind we could inhabit, it would most certainly be Tim Burton.

Brother and sister reunite thousands of miles from home

Ensign Kristina Melendez USS Chosin Public Affairs

One of the many things that a member of the American military has to sacrifice is the freedom to be able to spend valued time with loved ones. In a rare turn of events, two Sailors originally from Wichita, Kansas were able to have a short reunion thousands of miles from their home. On Sept. 9, Boatswain's Mate 3rd Class Brenda Bryant was shuttled from USS Chafee (DDG 90) to USS Chosin (CG 65) to visit her brother, Interior Communications Electrician Fireman Nathan Bryant, while both ships were conducting operations in the northern Arabian Gulf.

BM3 Bryant has been in the Navy for three years.

Joining out of high school, she said the educational opportunities that the military offers had a lot of appeal to her. After completing boot camp, she reported to Pascagoula, Miss. for duty onboard Precommissioning Unit Chafee where she became a plankowner, a member of the ship's commissioning crew.

Her brother, ICFN Bryant, followed suit and also joined the Navy upon graduation from high school. He requested to be stationed in Hawai'i to live near his sister and reported to USS Chosin (CG 65) on June 5, shortly before the ship's current deployment. Unfortunately, even though both are stationed in the same port, it has been over a year since they have seen each other. With opposite deployment schedules and different inport times, it is a rare occasion for their paths to cross. "I didn't expect to see her until after deployment," said ICFN Bryant.

Even so, the two keep in touch through email three to four times a day. BM3 said, "When I found out Chosin was going to be operating in the same area as we have been, I emailed Nathan and told him to submit a request chit."

She then submitted a special request chit herself through her chain-of-command to visit her brother. Both commands consented and when the two ships were at the right place at the right time, BM3 was brought over by a small boat to Chosin.

Both siblings were ecstatic about the opportunity. BM3 commented, "This is a once-in-a-lifetime absolutely amazing thing. To be able to see someone you care about this far from home is nice."

ICFN said, "I'm happy about the support from both of our commands." The two were given an entire day to spend time together - something that does not happen too often for any Sailor on deployment. In the midst of high-intensity work schedules and watches, this was a much-needed break for both. The pair could be seen walking around laughing and ribbing each other in the usual brother-sister fashion throughout the day.

As BM3 Bryant left Chosin later in the day, her brother jokingly called out, "You'll still be waiting on the pier for me when we get back from deployment, right?"

"Of course!" was the reply.
